

CORPORATE LAW • INSIGHT

Understanding Corporate Compliance, A Guide for Business Owners

John Doe • Senior Partner, Sterling & Cross

Most business owners do not think about compliance until something goes wrong, a missed filing, an outdated policy, a contract clause nobody reread in three years. By then, fixing it costs far more than preventing it would have.

Start with the basics that get skipped

Annual filings, updated operating agreements, and proper corporate records sound tedious, and they are, but they are also the difference between a business that can defend itself in a dispute and one that cannot. We regularly meet business owners who have not updated their bylaws since the day they incorporated.

“Fixing it later always costs more than preventing it would have.”

Employment law changes more than you think

Wage laws, classification rules, and workplace policies shift regularly, often at the state level, sometimes several times a year. A policy that was compliant two years ago may not be today. We recommend a compliance review at least annually, not just when hiring picks up.

Contracts are only as good as their weakest clause

A contract template pulled from the internet might cover the obvious cases and miss the one that actually happens. Every contract that matters to your business, vendor agreements, client contracts, partnership terms, deserves an actual legal review, not a template with your company name swapped in.

None of this needs to be overwhelming. A short annual review with counsel who already knows your business tends to catch most of what would otherwise become a costly problem later.

WRITTEN BY

John Doe

Senior Partner, Sterling & Cross

Have a matter like this?

Book a consultation and we'll connect you with the right team.

sterlingcross.law

© Sterling & Cross Law Firm. This publication is provided for general informational purposes only and does not constitute legal advice. Reading this document does not create an attorney-client relationship. For advice on your specific situation, please contact us directly at hello@sterlingcross.law.