A Practical Checklist for ESG Disclosure Ahead of a Cross-Border Listing

John Doe • Chair, Corporate & M&A, Senior Partner

Cross-border listings now mean satisfying two or three disclosure regimes at once, and they rarely agree on what counts as material.

Start with what regulators actually require, not what's trending

Voluntary frameworks are useful for investor relations, but the listing itself only cares about what the relevant regulator has actually made mandatory. Confusing the two wastes time and can bury the disclosures that actually matter under ones that don't.

"If a number is going in a prospectus, it needs a defensible methodology, not a good-faith estimate."

Data quality is where most disclosures fall apart

Emissions and workforce data collected for an internal sustainability report is rarely audit-ready. If a number is going in a prospectus, it needs a defensible methodology behind it, not a good-faith estimate from a spreadsheet.

Get assurance-ready before you need to be

Third-party assurance takes longer than issuers expect, and it exposes gaps that are much cheaper to fix six months before a filing than six weeks before one.

The checklist itself is straightforward, mandatory disclosures identified early, data collection processes documented, and assurance engaged well ahead of the filing timeline. The firms that treat it as a compliance exercise, not an afterthought, are the ones that don't lose weeks to last-minute gaps.
